Niche Urns

A niche is a final resting place typically located within a columbarium or mausoleum designed to hold one or two urns. For those families that opt for a niche as the final resting place for their urn Thacker has selected several urns below that are well suited for niche placement. The urns below are merely a sampling of niche urns and if you would like to see other designs please ask your funeral professional for more information.

Burial Urns

Many families prefer to bury the urn at a cemetery to leave a permanent place of remembrance for future generations. The urns below are a few of the urns that Thacker offers that can be buried. All of the urns below feature smaller keepsake urns allowing various members of the family to keep a portion of the remains while the remainder can be buried at a cemetery.

Scattering Urns

Scattering is the most permanent form of disposition and entails scattering the remains at an emotionally important location. Either a portion of the remains or all of the remains can be scattered by the family. The urns below are designed to aid in the scattering process. Additionally, several of the scattering urns are biodegradable.

CUSTOM PERSONALIZATION

The founder of the Babe Ruth Little League baseball organization had passed away and his family emailed over a letter of permission for Thacker to use the trademarked logo in the head panel design of his casket.

An avid bow-hunter who established a "hunt club" for all of his friends to enjoy passed away. Thacker designed the perfect archery bow, target and whitetail deer arrangement from its stock library and included the custom text of the club name.

The announcer of a local high school football team had passed away. He always played the song "Who Let the Dogs Out?" because the local high school team's mascot was a bulldog. Thacker paired the bulldog embroidery with the famous line from the song.

The family of a former United States Marine Corps member requested that the famous USMC emblem be stitched into the head panel of his casket and include; military ranking, name, birth and death dates, as well as family affiliations, for a truly personalized tribute.
